Since the days of the Confederacy the name of the veteran banker tong identified with prominent houses here, had figured in the financial world of the State, and his death at a great age removes from this circle one of its most courtly and striking figures.

In Richmond, where Mr. Lorkwood spent the best days of his life and where the body will be laid to rest this afternoon, the news of the death was received with regret. Thousands of people here remembered the aged banker with admiration and affection, and though all knew that the weight of the full years was bearing him Javit, the announcer month his departure curried sorrow to all. This was particularly true of the all. This was particularly true of the business men among whom Mr. Lock-wood had moved for nearly a half gen-tury.

JOSHUA WELLS LOCKWOOD.

Mr. Lockwood was then connected.

The business career of Mr. Lockwood began as it ended in the financial world. In 1851 be occupied a position with the Bank of the Old Dominion, of Alexandria, and this position he filled until about ten years later, when he came to Richmond. It is recorded that the Bank of the Old Dominion, after war was over, pold its deposits, redeemed its circulation and paid a dividend to its stockholderson of the few able to do this. The financial integrity of this bank was secured through Mr. Lockwood, then its discount clerk. On the advance of the Federal troops to Alexandria it is bank so gold was shipped to Lynchburg, and it was afterwards removed to Richmond in Mr. Lockwood's care. The demand for gold by the government was so great that nearly all the banks surrendered their funds and took Confederate securities and when the end came the banks were swept to destruction in the general uphaval. Not so with the Bank of the Old Dominion. Its fallful discount clerk secured its gold and at the evacuation of Richmond; field with it. South. Two months later he returned it intact to the board of directors at Alexandria, along with two thousand dollars in silver, which he buried in a sarcophagus in Charlottesville, and dug up after his return.

HIS ANNIVERSARY.

In 1808 Whe twenty-ninth anniversary of Mr. Lockwood as casher of the National Bank of Virginia was made the occasion for a striking testimonial to his worth. Sixty of the depositors of the bank presented him with a handsome silver tea and coffee service. "It witnesses," said a handsomely engraved and framed testimonial, "not only our high appreciation of your fidelity, ability and courtesy as a bank officer, exhibited through more than a quarter of a contury of arduous and urremitting service, but it bears testimony also to our admiration and esteem for you as an upright and downright man, and to our hearty affection to you as a friend, ever faithful and ever ready to do all in your power for any friend in need of help in any way." The presentation was made by Colonel James Lyons and Major Stiles.

About the fall of 1809 Mr. Lockwood retired from the National Bank of Virginiu and became vice-president of the new American National Bank. About a year later he left and went to Orange. FAMILY AND FUNERAL.
